Alsim is extremely pleased to announce the consolidation of its ongoing partnership with the CAFUC. Alsim has been awarded the recent tender for supply of 4 AL42 simulators sold to CAFUC (Civil Aviation Flight University of China), thus increasing the fleet of Alsims within the CAFUC to 9 simulators. Dedicated to PPL & IR training, this device, first developed in developed in 2005, is an exact replica of the latest Diamond 42 Aircraft with features such as real Garmin G1000 NXI avionics and the Alsim VFR High Definition Visual System.

Mr Mike Tonkin, Alsim Global Business Development Director, commented: "It's a true pleasure for Alsim to have been chosen by the CAFUC. Since last year when we installed the 5 172's the relationship with the CAFUC has been very positive, it is great to work with such a professional flight training university. We are all aware of the high pilot demand in Asia, and in China in particular. We look forward to continuing to support Chinese pilot training market.
This team collaboration and win is due to our exclusive partnership agreement with PCAT. PCAT will continue to install and maintain our simulators for CAFUC and other clients in China. We have of a great cooperation and working relationship between our entities, and confirm this the next step of a great future for Alsim in China."

Civil Aviation Flight University of China (CAFUC) is the only full-time regular institution of higher education for civil aviation pilots, as well as technicians of other civil aviation specialties and high-quality applied professionals in engineering, management and arts required by national economy, under the direct jurisdiction of CAAC. Now CAFUC has more than 23 000 full-time students, including more than 10 thousand student pilots. It has formed an educational pattern of "flight orientation and comprehensive development" and become the largest "university of civil aviation" in Asia with world reputation.
